

Prepare for N.I.C.E, New Italian Cinema Events

N. L. (November 13, 2014)

N.I.C.E, New Italian Cinema Events is heading back to the US for a new exciting series of contemporary Italian cinema. Year after year, the festival, now its 24th edition, brings around the world Italian films made by young directors at their first or second experience. This is an important opportunity for new Italian promising directors to have their talent recognized outside the borders of their home country.

N.I.C.E, New Italian Cinema Events [2] is heading back to the US for a new exciting series of contemporary Italian cinema. Year after year, the festival, now its 24th edition, brings around the world Italian films made by young directors at their first or second experience. This is an important opportunity for new Italian promising directors to have their talent recognized outside the borders of their home country.

The festival was created by founded by Viviana del Bianco and Grazia Santini in 1991, to become, over the past years, one of the most relevant and appreciated international showcases of the up-and-coming Italian cinema in the United States, Russia and China. The festival in the USA is traditionally held during the second and third weeks of November in New York City and San Francisco, and this year it's making a quick stop in Washington D.C.

This year's N.I.C.E. in New York is presented in collaboration with the Italian Cultural Institute, New York; the Consulate General of Italy; the School of Visual Arts' Film Department, the New York Film Academy and NYU's Casa Italiana Zerilli-Marimò. Additional sponsorship is provided by Comune di Firenze; Fondazione Sistema Toscana; Ministero dei Beni Culturali and Affari Esteri; and Regione Toscana.

Once again, the Italian Cultural Institute in New York will host the presentation of this year's selection, which features seven terrific films by up-and-coming directors, qualifying for the City of Florence Award (Through voting ballots, N.I.C.E.'s audiences are responsible for assigning the "N.I.C.E - City of Florence Award" to one of the seven feature films in competition every year, which is screened in Florence in December): the first-ever animated feature film shown by the festival ("The Art of Happiness" by Alessandro Rak), an Italian production entirely in Arabic ("Border" by Alessio Cremonini), a suspense-oriented film in the giallo tradition ("House of Shadows" by Rossella De Venuto), a LGBT road-trip set between Barcelona and Chile ("Up to the world" by Alessandro Lunardelli), a raucously entertaining and geeky version of hit TV-show Breaking Bad ("I Can Quit Whenever I Want" by Sydney Sibilia), a scathing indictment of the pharmaceutical industry ("The Medicine Seller" by Antonio Morabito) and a charming romantic comedy revolving around kleptomania and narcolepsy ("Remember Me?"

by Rolando Ravello).

On November 20th, N.I.C.E. will make a quick stop-over in Washington D.C. for an additional special screening of "Blame Freud", before proceeding to San Francisco, where this year's full film selection will be showcased, in addition to Asia Argento's "Misunderstood", Paolo Virzì's "Human Capital", Roberto Andò's "Long Live Freedom", Stefano Incerti's "Snow", Giovanni Cioni's "Per Ulisse" and an evening with Edoardo Ponti.
